Media and the Path to Peace

This is the first book to examine in detail the roles that the news media can play in an ongoing peace process. Gadi Wolfsfeld explains how the press’s role in such processes varies over time and political circumstance. He examines three major cases: the Oslo peace process between Israel and the Palestinians; the peace process between Israel and Jordan; and the process surrounding the Good Friday agreement in Northern Ireland. Wolfsfeld’s central argument is that there is a fundamental contradiction between news values and the nature of a peace process. This often leads the media to play a destructive role in attempts to make peace, but variations in the political and media environment affect significantly exactly how the media behave. Wolfsfeld shows how the media played a mainly destructive role in the Oslo peace process, but were more constructive during the Israel–Jordan process and in Northern Ireland.

GADI WOLFSFELD is an Associate Professor of Political Science and Communication at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He is the author of Media and Political Conflict: News from the Middle East (1997).
COMMUNICATION, SOCIETY AND POLITICS

Editors
W. Lance Bennett, University of Washington
Robert M. Entman, North Carolina State University

Editorial Advisory Board
Larry M. Bartels, Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, Princeton University
Jay G. Blumler, Emeritus, University of Leeds and University of Maryland
Daniel Dayan, Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris, and Department of Media & Communications, University of Oslo
Doris A. Graber, Department of Political Science, University of Illinois at Chicago
Paolo Mancini, Istituto di Studi Sociali, Facoltà di Scienze Politiche, Università di Perugia and Scuola di Giornalismo Radiotelevisivo, Perugia
Pippa Norris, Shorenstein Center on the Press, Politics, and Public Policy,
   Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University
Barbara Pfetsch, Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin für Socialforschung
Philip Schlesinger, Film and Media Studies, University of Stirling
David L. Swanson, Department of Speech Communication, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
Gadi Wolfsfeld, Department of Political Science and Department of Communication and Journalism, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem
John Zaller, University of California, Los Angeles

Politics and relations among individuals in societies across the world are being performed by new technologies for targeting individuals and sophisticated methods for shaping personalized messages. The new technologies challenge boundaries of many kinds — between news, information, entertainment, and advertising; between media, with the arrival of the World Wide Web; and even between nations. Communication, Society and Politics probes the political and social impacts of these new communication systems in national, comparative, and global perspectives.
Media and the Path to Peace

Gadi Wolfsfeld

Department of Political Science
Department of Communication and Journalism
The Hebrew University of Jerusalem
This book is dedicated to the victims of violent conflict and their families.
Contents

Acknowledgements page xi

Introduction 1

1. Building theory 8

2. The initial stages of Oslo 45

3. The Israeli media and the debate over Oslo 77

4. The Palestinians and the Israeli media 104

5. The media and the Israel–Jordan peace process 137

6. The media and the struggle for peace in Northern Ireland 158

7. The collapse of Oslo and the return to violence 182

Conclusion 220

Methodological appendix 232

References 247

Index 255
Acknowledgements

This book is the result of a number of years of research and I have received a good deal of support along the way. First I want to thank a number of foundations and institutes who provided financial support for carrying out the research. The first group of sponsors are all affiliated with my home institution, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem: The Levi Eshkol Institute for Social, Economic, and Political Research in Israel, the Harry S. Truman Institute for the Advancement of Peace (who provided a grant from the Turner Fund for Peace), and the Smart Family Foundation Communication Institute. I also received a generous grant from The Tami Steinmetz Center for Peace Research at Tel Aviv University.

I owe a special debt of gratitude to the United States Institute of Peace, who granted me a yearlong fellowship to work on this project. The institute also provided the funds for me to carry out the research in Northern Ireland. I am especially grateful to Joe Klaits and John Crist, who provided a seemingly endless supply of support and assistance during my year in Washington. My research assistant during that year was Guy Ben-Porat; his intelligence and insight were major assets.

I also want to thank all of those who have read previous versions of this manuscript. I hope they will all identify the significant contribution they have made to the final product: Lance Bennett, Robert Entman, Liz Fawcett, Bill Gamson, Tamir Sheaffer, Steven Livingston, Greg McLaughlin, Farida Viz, and Gabi Weimann.

Finally I want to thank my family – Lauren, Noa, and Dana – for their love, their support, their values, and their courage.