Acknowledgements

No work of this kind is an entirely individual exercise, and like all authors I have a strong sense of indebtedness to the many people on whose support and expertise I have called over the past few years. Asa Briggs and John Burrow have given unstintingly of their time, and their help and encouragement has been legion. Angus MacIntyre's insights were invaluable in helping me re-structure a rather shambling doctoral thesis. The enthusiasm and energy of the archivists in the various local archaeological societies I visited served to convince me of the value of this work in moments of doubt; other librarians and archivists too were generous with their time and advice. Ruth Vyse at the Bodleian Library Oxford and the librarians of Jesus College Oxford and the Society of Antiquaries of London were all patient with the questions of a beginner. John Cantwell at the new Public Record Office in Kew and Elizabeth Hallam Smith at the Chancery Lane office were enthusiastic about the project and vastly knowledgeable. Louisa Sadler's calm efficiency in the face of technical problems ensured the final appearance of the manuscript. Finally, I should like to thank King's College Cambridge without whose initial financial generosity this project could never have come to fruition.
