This is a series of monographs and studies covering many aspects of the history of the British Isles between the late fifteenth century and the early eighteenth century. It includes the work of established scholars and pioneering work by a new generation of scholars. It includes both reviews and revisions of major topics and books which open up new historical terrain or which reveal startling new perspectives on familiar subjects. All the volumes set detailed research into broader perspectives and the books are intended for the use of students as well as of their teachers.

Titles in the series

The Common Peace: Participation and the Criminal Law in Seventeenth-Century England

CYNTHIA B. HERRUP
Politics and Civil War in Warwickshire, 1620–1660

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is based on a doctoral thesis submitted at the University of Oxford in December 1985, the research for which was supported by a grant from the Department of Education and Science. The thesis was completed, and the book written, during my tenure of a research fellowship at Christ's College, Cambridge. The former institution made my research possible: the latter made it pleasurable. Both Christ's College and the Twenty-Seven Foundation have generously assisted my work. I am grateful to the marquess of Bath, the duke of Beaufort, and Lord Hampton for permission to read and cite manuscripts in their possession. Ruth Spalding kindly allowed me to see her transcription of the Diary of Bulstrode Whitelocke before its publication. I am much indebted to the archivists to the marquess of Bath, the duke of Beaufort, the staff of many libraries and record offices – above all Duke of Humphrey's library in the Bodleian – for their immense patience and assistance.

Ronald Hutton's The Restoration appeared in the year my thesis was submitted. Without it, this book would have been scarcely possible, and I am much in his debt for his generous encouragement. Needless to say, my account differs from his on many minor and some major points. I have not chosen to draw attention to all of these, as specialist readers will in any case want to read the two side by side. Mine is intended not to controvert, but to complement his.

Many friends and colleagues have helped me immeasurably with information and advice. I have derived much benefit from the knowledge of David Yale, Mark Goldie, Jeremy Ive, and John Spurr, from discussion with them, with Andrew Coleby and Andrew Swatland on Restoration politics, and from the seventeenth-century seminar run by Anne Whiteman and Blair Worden in Oxford from 1981 to 1985. The examiners of my thesis, Toby Barnard and John Kenyon, were most helpful, as has been John Morrill, one of the editors of this series. Sir Geoffrey Elton generously agreed to read through the typescript. I am most grateful to him for his advice. I am also deeply indebted to Sir John Plumb for his many kindnesses.

My profoundest intellectual debts are to Blair Worden and to my research supervisor, Robert Beddard, both of whose pertinent criticism and unfailing patience and friendship have guided this work through all its stages, and are all-too-meanly rewarded in its results.

One of my greatest creditors has a page to herself.

NOTE

In all quotations in English, spelling and the use of capital letters have been modernised. Alterations to punctuation have been kept to a minimum: where it has been necessary to change it, the change is indicated in a footnote. All dates are old style, with the year regarded as beginning on 1 January; although in the case of documents which have crossed to or from the continent, both old and new dates are given.
