Acknowledgments

Writing this book would have been inconceivable if I had not been granted access to several collections of unpublished letters and other manuscripts. Permission to quote from these materials has been kindly granted by the following individuals and associations:

Caroline H. Dall Papers and Annie Adams Fields Papers – Massachusetts Historical Society
 de Kay and Gilder family papers, including Mary Temple's letters to Helena de Kay – Gilder Palmer

 Mary Hallock Foote Papers – Evelyn Foote Gardiner and Stanford University Libraries (Special Collections)
 Robertson James Papers – Henry James Vaux
 Katharine Prince Papers – Colby College Library (Special Collections)
 All other James family papers – by permission of Alexander R. James and the Houghton Library, Harvard
 Letters of Robert and Mary Temple, Frances Macdaniel, and Elizabeth Stoddard – by permission of the Houghton Library, Harvard

I am also obliged to the many librarians who have opened their collections and facilities to me or taken the time to answer my questions. My thanks to the helpful staffs at Houghton Library, Widener Library, Harvard Law School Library Treasure Room, Boston Public Library, Massachusetts Historical Society, Swedenborg School of Religion Library, Butler Library at Columbia University, Suzzallo Library at the University of Washington, Stanford University Libraries (Special Collections), University of Virginia Library (Manuscripts Department), Minnesota Historical Society, Museum and Library of Maryland History, Enoch Pratt Free Library, Library of Congress, British Museum Library, Archives Nationales in Paris, New York Public Library, and Watson Library at the University of Kansas (where I want to single out Evelyn Gelhaus, Rob Melton, the Reference Department in general, and Interlibrary Loan).

To recall the many intellectual debts I have incurred to fellow scholars and others during the writing of this book is to relive much of the past six years. For help in locating privately held papers, I am grateful to Evelyn Foote Gardiner, Paul R. Baker, Ormonde de Kay, and W. deKay Palmer. Gilder Palmer graciously allowed me a free hand with family papers, and Jane Maher turned me loose in her research files and passed on some good stories. Addy Tintner, Taylor Stoehr, and Jonathan Beecher sent prompt and productive answers to my inquiries. My spring 1988 Henry James seminar made a significant difference in the final version of this book, thanks in part to the stimulating contributions of Brad Born, David Davis, Jennifer Dean, Gardner Mein, Jan Martin Moreno, Dan Murtaugh, and Steven Trout. This is also the place to memorialize some challenging conversations and exchanges with Carol Holly, Ian F. A. Bell, Dan Fogel (whose backing has been deeply appreciated), and Bill Veeder (who showed me the holes in a chapter I thought I had completed). June Howard, William T. Stafford, George Monteiro, Tom O'Donnell, Warren Rosenberg, Linda Smith Rhoads, Lou Budd, Addy Tintner, and Ian F. A. Bell all provided me with opportunities to get preliminary versions of my work out in public. Ian Bell and Charles Swann gave me some excellent practical advice. Thanks to Leon Edel for encouragement and a keen critique of some of my ideas; to Tony Tanner for saving me from some flat-footed stumbles; and to Nina Baym, Susan Gilbert, Joel Porte, Wendy Martin, Michael Johnson, and Lou Budd for aid, comfort, and correction over the years the book has consumed. Special thanks to my copy editor, Mary Byers.

Finally, because the writing of a book consumes more than time, I express gratitude to the National Endowment for the Humanities for a timely Senior Research Fellowship; to the Hall Center for the Humanities for travel grants, a semester's research leave, and more; and to the University of Kansas for a sabbatical, two GRF grants, and supplementary aid (from the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences).
