ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

An earlier version of the present study was accepted as a Ph.D. thesis by the University of Lancaster in 1979, and the present book is an abbreviated version of that thesis. I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to my supervisor, Dr D. R. Catchpole, whose unfailing kindness and helpful criticism at every stage of my research have provided a constant source of support and encouragement. Whilst none of the shortcomings of this book is due to him, his insistence on the highest standards of logical rigour in any form of argument has provided me with an ideal to which I can aspire but rarely attain. I would also like to thank the Governing Body of Queens' College, Cambridge, for electing me into a Bye-Fellowship in the middle of my period of study, enabling me to give more time to the research necessary for this book. Although I have often disagreed with him, I would like to thank Professor Farmer: he has been generous with his time on a number of occasions in discussing his views with me, and he has also kindly made available to me a number of his unpublished papers. The Reverend Robert Morgan provided the initial stimulus which enabled me to start thinking about starting post-graduate research and his constant encouragement has proved invaluable. The editors of the Monograph series, Professor Wilson and Dr Thrall, made very helpful suggestions for preparing my original thesis for publication and I am very grateful to them. Finally, I must thank my wife, but for whose encouragement and patience this book would never have been begun, continued or ended.
