This is the first English-language collection of essays on modern German history with a generational theme. Responding to a recent shift in social historical writing away from an exclusive focus on class towards an interest in other 'imagined communities' of ethnicity, gender and generation, it addresses, first, the extraordinary power and persistence of a German tradition of youthful rebellion extending from the Sturm und Drang in the eighteenth century to the student revolts of 1968. At the same time it analyses the impact of the dramatic ruptures and discontinuities in modern German history on the formation and interaction of successive historical cohorts. Using a variety of different approaches, including literary and oral history, the collection pays particular attention to the way generational identities interacted with those of class and gender. The book adds to our understanding of generations, the balance between continuity and discontinuity in modern German history, the generational roots of National Socialism and the Hitler Youth generation's impact on East and West German society.

Acknowledgements

The origins of this collection date back to a German History Society Conference ‘The Generation Game’ which I organised at the University of Keele in April 1991. That conference would not have been possible without the very generous assistance of the Goethe Institute Manchester, and its then director, Dr Murjahn. Thanks for financial assistance are due also to the British Academy, the Committee of the German History Society under its then chairman Richard Evans and the History Department at Keele. I would like to thank all those who took part in the conference, either as discussants or from the floor, for making it such a stimulating event.

Since then, all the papers have been very substantially revised and a number of new contributions added. I am very grateful to CUP’s (anonymous) readers for their helpful and constructive comments and to our editor, Richard Fisher, for his patience and support.

This is in no sense of the word a Festschrift, but because I and so many of the contributors either knew him well personally as a friend or colleague or benefited from his many important publications on youth policy, youth resistance and more widely on German social history, this collection is affectionately dedicated to the memory of Detlev Peukert.
